

Warmer years associate with more rain and snow, and both the temperature and precipitation have increased over time. Since warm air is known to hold more water vapour, at least part of the positive association between temperature and precipitation is likely causal. A warning of a wetter and warmer future?